Super Tuesday

It's Super Tuesday and, like you, I've been listening to the candidates' speeches—listening for the stuff I can get behind. No one candidate has a corner on my personal market, but these are some of the convictions that get my Coach-like attention when I hear them:

- 1. The world, and our individual lives, works best when we each take personal responsibility for our "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness". (Much better than delegating or abdicating that responsibility).*
- 2. The best products and services are produced by people who are doing #1.*
- 3. The most fulfilling compensation (financial and otherwise) results from #1 and #2.*
- 4. And it's necessary to invest in staying safe from beliefs and philosophies and actions that focus on blocking, controlling or destroying #1, #2, and #3.*

Knowing you, you'll have your own convictions to add, but those four are on my mind this Super-Tuesday morning. Let me know what you think.
